Apples, woodland, streams, surprises, views, easy field paths, pub

In Brief

If Kent is the Garden of England, then this is certainly the Orchard of England as you will instantly see. But first you need to pronounce the village's name so you don't receive any wry smiles from the very welcoming inhabitants of this delightful village. The first syllable sounds as "Edge". This walk takes you through apple orchards and woodland to meet the Stour Valley Walk (which follows Kent's second river) before looping back across fields where the paths are always nice and wide and clear. There are no steep sections, but this pioneering walk has some other navigational challenges. There are many surprises along the way which are best left to those places in this text where you meet them quite unexpectedly.

The Barrow House pub re-opened in 2021. For booking or enquiries, ring 01233-756599.

There are some nettles on this walk, also undergrowth, some at shoulder height, so shorts and short sleeves are not advisable. Boots are not necessary but, if the weather has been damp, they are preferred because the ground may be a little spongy in the meadows which form part of the river plain of the Stour. Your dog should be happy on this walk, with a lead of course.

The walk begins in the village of Egerton, near Ashford, Kent, postcode TN27 9DJ. There is (discreet) roadside parking. For more details, see at the end of this text (→ Getting There).

The Walk

The name "Egerton" means "the farmstead of Eegheard", the original Saxon owner. The parish has around 80 listed buildings. The oldest houses in the village go back to the 1400s. Because this is farming country, many of them are spread out along the Greensand ridge. Apart from the church (see below), the most important building is the "Barrow House" inn, previously known as "The George". This inn now has a clean pine interior, offering good food and at least three ales, typically Whitstable, Cellar Head and the inn's own Barrow House Brew. A bright prospect for the end of the walk. On most weekdays, the inn operates a pizza oven with a choice of toppings.

- 1 Starting in the village of Egerton, go through the large metal gate into the churchyard. The ragstone Church of St James dates from the 1400s. The tower, which you can see from miles around, houses six bells, which you may also hear during the walk. Go left round the side, then straight down through the cemetery and left through a small wooden gate at the bottom into an apple orchard. Mid Kent Growers is a collective with vast tracts of apple orchards which dominate this part of the Garden of England. Take a path which runs through the orchard on the left side, so that you have one bank of fruit trees on your left at first, the remainder on your right. The path is partly surfaced with stone slabs and is therefore unmistakable. Note that you are walking on part of the Greensand Way, a long distance path from Haslemere, Surrey to Hamstreet in East Kent. The zigzagging path goes round the corner of some woodland keeping the same general direction. As you come through a band of trees, keep straight on, now with a tall hedge on your left. You come past a large metal gate, under ash and willow, past a cottage, then two more, to continue on a tarmac drive, leading out to a lane, with the large white Egerton House on your left.

Egerton House, with its grand music room, has long been a weekend home for musicians. It is owned by violinist and conductor Bryan Gripps. The fine white façade was added by owner Sir Horace Mann who hosted the the Mozart family's trip to England in 1765.

- 2 Turn right on the lane, thus leaving the Greensand Way. The lane runs down through woodland, passing the small wooden gate of Keepers Cottage on your left. Shortly after this, as the fence on your left ends, go left at a signpost on a footpath into Foxden Wood, a home to broods of pheasants as you may see. [Aug 2019: soon you have to bypass the roots of a large fallen tree.] Your path enters an open area, veering right to meet a marker post where a wide forestry track crosses. Fork immediately right on a rising path, as indicated by the arrow. This path comes up to a T-junction. Turn left as indicated by the yellow arrow. You reach a junction of four paths. Veer right here uphill, as indicated by the yellow arrow. Where the track suddenly bends away right, leave it by turning left on a narrow path into a small garden. (Yes, this is correct!) You pass to the left of a small caravan and to the right of a small wooden house. (You may need to negotiate a washing line and a water butt: maybe you can pass to the left of the house, but that is difficult to see.) Welcome to Burscombe Farm!

Take away the tractor and this farm would be unchanged from a century ago. As a (Greensand) "ridge farm" it commands terrific views north to the Downs. Also, in consequence, the farm would have needed twice the usual number of horses to heave the produce down the hill and back. The farm is even more organic than organic, since it uses no artificial aids (although they do not formally register it). The pig pens house a small herd of saddlebacks. The prize residents are a wonderful breeding pair of Blonde d'Aquitaines (beef cattle), brought over from France. If you come at a pause in the heavy workload, you may even be lucky enough to have the livestock breeds explained to you by the lady owner.

- 3 Continue up the concrete track, out to a tarmac lane. Ignore a signposted footpath opposite and turn right on the lane. Immediately after a bungalow, turn left on a track signed as a footpath. You go between fields with great view of the Downs. Ignore a metal kissing-gate on your right as you go. Continue straight through the farm, passing its large barns, and straight down a rough track. Only 100m from the farm, at the corner of a hedgerow, turn right through a large metal gate into a long narrow wild meadow.
-  Continue straight through the farm, passing its large barns, and straight down a rough track. Only 100m from the farm, at the corner of a hedgerow, turn right through a large metal gate into a long narrow wild meadow.
- 4 Follow the path, keeping the large hedge on your right. After 280m you come to the end of the hedge. Turn left here following the footpath arrow down to a ditch with a bridge across it, marked by yellow topped stakes. (There is also a path straight ahead, staying in the meadow and, in 300m, cutting across a crop field, direct to the next landmark, Burnt Mill) Once over the bridge, go straight ahead to a modern kissing-gate. The path takes you over a bridge across the Stour and up into a crop field. Turn right and shortly left on a good but narrow path across the centre of the field. The path ends at a small metal gate, taking you into a grassy meadow and introducing you to the Stour Valley Walk. This is a 54-mile=87 km walk from Lenham near here, where the river is young, ending at Pegwell Bay, near Ramsgate. In the corner, go through a kissing-gate and resume direction beside a crop field. As it passes a corner, your path goes straight across the centre of the field. After a kissing-gate, turn right on a cinder track which wheels left past sheds, soon giving you sight of the two mill ponds of the picturesque Burnt Mill, 18th-century Grade II listed. The 3.15m waterwheel which drove a pit wheel stopped rolling in the mid-1950s.

- 5 Keep to the right of a barn (still in construction 2019-2021). Very shortly, at the end of a fence, go right through a kissing-gate, over a (tricky) 3-plank bridge into a meadow [May 2020: walkers report a gap which is difficult to cross]. Keep to the right-hand edge, making use of a thick plank or two to take you over a marshy section (soggy in winter). You cross a small bridge with a stream on your right and come through a kissing-gate. You must by now be aware of the M20 motorway and its high-speed rail: don't disparage it as a rude intrusion – it's likely it brought you to this peaceful place! Ignore a gated bridge on your right across the Stour and stay in the meadow. A redundant bridge leads into the next meadow. A vital turning now approaches: look for a long bridge on your right, opposite an electricity pole. Go right over the bridge (hopping over a bar at each end) and through an optional kissing-gate. Now keep the same direction, going diagonally across a large meadow, heading for an earth bank which bisects the meadow. After going up over the bank, you can see a signpost and small metal kissing-gate half-way along the far edge, under an electricity pole.
- 6 Go through the gate and turn left on a tarmac lane, still on the Stour Valley walk. This very quiet lane goes over a bridge and slightly uphill. At a T-junction, turn right on a wider lane. In 200m, as the lane bends right before a house, go left at a signpost on a footpath, through a kissing-gate into a sheep meadow. Keep to the left-hand side. As you approach a fenced enclosure which juts out, head for the right-hand corner. When you reach the corner, turn right on a path which cuts across the centre of the pasture. A kissing-gate and a bridge are followed by a path across the centre of a crop field. A wide concrete bridge leads into the next field. At the end, your path goes through a gap in the hedge to a tarmac drive. Turn right on the drive and, in 20m, left on a track beside a whiteboard house. The track is available to horse riders as part of the off-road network.
- 7 The track narrows and becomes a path up the left-hand side of a crop field. The tower of Egerton church is now clearly visible. Just before the end of the field, opposite a gap in the hedge, go right on a path which cuts the field diagonally. Go through a gap in the hedge, ignore a path straight ahead and instead turn right on a grassy path between tall hedges. As you pass a large metal gate on your right at a division between fields. go left at a marker post (easily missed!) through a gap in the hedge. Now go diagonally right through a metal gate, diagonally across a meadow and through another metal gate. Go over a track, up a couple of rough steps, and through a kissing-gate under tall trees. Cross this pleasant lawn, going through yet another kissing-gate into a tree garden, through a kissing-gate and left on a short footpath leading to a tall wooden gate. Yes, this is correct! You are in the premises of a very fine purveyor of plants and wooden garden fixtures. Turn left alongside the house, follow the path and turn right before a hedge at the top. A short dirt drive takes you out to the road in Egerton close to the church where the walk began.

Getting there

By car: Egerton is signposted off the A20 road, just over a mile east of Lenham and about 3 miles west of Charing. If coming from the London area, take the M20 motorway and come off at junction 8 (Leeds Castle). Follow the A20 for 5 miles through Lenham. Now look for a right filter and a sign for Lenham Heath, Egerton. Follow the signs to Egerton, watching out for twists and turns.

By bus/train: bus 123 from Ashford or Charing; not weekends. Check the timetables.
