Dramatic hills, views, woodland, church, village

In Brief

Behind the historic village of Wye, in East Kent, the Downs are not just a line of hills but an undulating picture of ridges and valleys, woods and meadows. This walk tries to pick out the best parts of several classic routes, beginning and ending at a spectacular steep valley which so many come to see. At the high point of the walk, there is a lonely wayside inn which serves some of the best food in Kent. (For enquiries, ring The Compasses on 01227-700300. Note that the chef takes a week's holiday in October and the pub is occasionally taken over for a private function.)

There are a few places where nettles encroach on the path, so shorts may be uncomfortable. The terrain is not difficult, some of it being on quiet lanes (so quiet, hardly a single car will pass you). So many walkers wear trainers but boots, as always, are comfortable, especially in the wetter months. The walk is fine for your dog too.

The walk begins at the Devil's Kneading Trough car park, postcode TN25 5HE. This famous beauty spot is on the Coldharbour Road, just east of Wye. If coming from Wye, the car park is on the left, ¼ miles after a double road junction. For more details, see at the end of this text (→ Getting There).

The Walk

Preliminary: The Devil's Kneading Trough 600m=0.4 miles

The start of this walk takes you along a short section of the North Downs Way to see a famous scenic landmark. The end of the walk will provide another chance to see it, maybe framed by the setting sun.

From the middle of the car park, cross the road, go through a double wooden gate, then straight down the grass to the famous steep valley known as the Devil's Kneading Trough that looks west over the Kentish Weald. Turn right along the edge on what is part of the North Downs Way, (NDW), a long-distance footpath that runs from Farnham in Surrey to Dover. The path goes round the sharp point of the valley. When you reach some wooden gates on your left leading to a Nature Reserve, ignore them and bear a fraction right uphill, still on the NDW. The path takes you through a wooden swing-gate and along a grassy path. It veers left down into trees and then veers right up a small slope. At a marker post indicating the nature trail, veer right on the main path, quickly going through a wooden swing-gate and out to the road.

Leg 1: Outward 5½ km=3½ miles

- 1 Cross the road to a tarmac lane opposite, marked as a cul-de-sac. Avoid a signed footpath on your left (your return route), thus leaving the NDW. Follow this tarmac lane down into the valley, ignoring footpaths on the left and the right. As you approach Coombe Manor, ignore a bridleway on your right and immediately take the main left fork. Veer right between the buildings on a main track and keep going round to the right until you are facing a large open barn used as a workshop, with a hawthorn hedge on its right. Go through the gate on the right of the hedge and along the left-hand side of a small pasture which is used for horses and sometimes contains jumping gates. Yes, this is a byway, although disguised by the owners who like to encourage use of the bridleway you passed. [2019: a walker suggests a third alternative: 100m before Coombe Manor take an unmarked gate on the right (the old bridle trail); go 200m up the grassy hill, then make a left through a metal gate in the direction of the hawthorn hedge described above and pick up the route from there.]
- 2 At the end of the pasture, go through a large metal gate and turn left through another large metal gate onto a path that runs between a field on your left and woodland on your right. Where the first field finishes, your path goes through a fence and enters Hurst Wood, becoming a pleasing straight woodland trail. After 500m in the woods, you come out by a metal barrier to a wide chalky track. Turn sharp right uphill. When, in 200m or so, you reach the top of the incline, turn sharp left on a wide path marked as a byway with a meadow on your left and woodland on your right. After 350m your path enters Towns Wood. In 500m suddenly you have open views on your right to the Downs at Waltham. Go through a large metal gate (or shift left-right to go round it) onto a straight high path, running between hedges, with fabulous views on your left. Finally the church can be glimpsed through the hedge on your right and you reach a viewpoint with benches. St Mary's church, Crundale is always worth a visit.

Crundale parish church of St Mary is a Grade I listed building, built by the Normans in the 1100s, with additions over the next 300 years. Three bells were cast at different times. Edward Hasted, author of "The History and Topographical Survey of the County of Kent" described church In 1798 as consisting of "one isle and one chancel, with a tower steeple on the north side, having a small pointed low turret on the top. There are three bells in it". Indeed, the unusual flint tower, the steep roof and the wonderful long light interior make this isolated church a memorable building.

- 3 After a possible break to visit the church, turn right on the lane beside the church. As you go, Hobbs' Hill looms up towards the east. When you come to a T-junction on this very quiet lane, turn left (on the right is private). The lane goes steadily uphill under a dark canopy of trees and it is quite a relief to reach a T-junction at the top where there is a seat. Assuming that you would like a break at The Compasses, turn right on the lane. (If you want to skip the pub and the village, turn left and omit the rest of this section.) You pass some small houses in the hamlet of Sole Street and soon reach The Compasses, a charmer of a pub.

Arriving in front of this small inn in such an unpretentious village, it is surprising to learn that it serves some of the best food in rural Kent and was voted Shepherd Neame's restaurant of the year 2014. The lunch menu offering of "ox cheek bap, with horseradish mayonnaise and dripping chips" tells you this is no ordinary fare. All this is served on one big table by the bar or in the restaurant area at the back. There is also a garden. For the less hungry there is a rambler's dish and of course Shepherd Neame ales plus a guest (e.g. Bateman Black & White). The pub is open all day Tue-Sat and till 6 on Sunday. Food is served at normal mealtimes. Mind your head on the hops and the low beams. Arrive in the evening and you may be entertained with jazz.

Behind the pub is the vast Denge Wood, one of the largest in Kent, worthy of a whole day's exploration, alas not on the route.

Leg 2: Return 7 km=4½ miles

- 1 See map overleaf. After your break, retrace your steps back along the lane, ignoring the small lane on the left by which you arrived. Continue with great views on your left. You pass regardless a footpath on your right, a byway on your right and a footpath on your left. The lane curves right and then does a complete left turn to reach Winchcombe Farm. Leave the lane here by turning left through the metal gates into the farmyard. Turn immediately right on the grass and up the right-hand side of a field. At the first corner, continue ahead across the field on a faint path (or through crops, depending on the season). Head for the left-hand corner of a grassy patch visible ahead. When you reach it, keep ahead to go up on a path in Viney's Wood.

- 2] When you emerge at the other side of the wood, through a metal kissing-gate, the village of Crundale is below. “Below” is the right word because you have a steep hillside to descend and this can seem problematic. Your direction is straight down where you can see a road junction, but the best course is to “tack”, as follows. Turn right for 100m to the corner of the fence where you are clear of the nettles. Now turn sharp left and zigzag down the hill. As you near the bottom you can see a metal gate. Head for a marker post near the gate and go through a kissing-gate just below it. Turn right on a tarmac lane, thus keeping the same direction, into the village. When you meet a major road, keep straight on, signposted to Wye.

The name “Crundale” comes from Old English “crundel” meaning a chalk pit or quarry (compare “Cron dall” Hampshire, also on this site). An old account describes it thus: “The hills are very frequent in it, and exceedingly barren; the soil is in general chalk, covered with quantities of flints. The country here is very healthy; it is exceeding cold, and has a wild and dreary appearance.”

- 3] Follow this winding lane past several classy properties. After the last house, Valleys Green, the lane rises into woodland. On your left shortly is a small fingerpost. Turn left here through a metal barrier into the woods and immediately fork left, almost doubling back. Your path curves right and, in 150m, meets a T-junction and a marker post. Turn left here on a wide path. In 10m, ignore a rough track on your right made by forestry vehicles. In another 10m, turn right on what looks like a dead end but immediately veer left up a bank, past a post with a yellow arrow, into a field. Veer right and follow a path along the wide grassy fringe, with Warren Wood on your right. At the far side, by a post with a yellow arrow, your path continues into woodland.
- 4] In 20m, you reach a T-junction with a farm track. Turn right uphill through woodland. Where the farm track quickly veers right uphill, keep straight ahead on a much narrower path in Marriage Wood, a noted haven for bluebells. Follow this path on a more-or-less straight course between bracken and brambles which opens out into mature woodland. You are now walking parallel to a field on your left. You come out to a wide crossing track. Turn right on this track.

- 5 Immediately leave the track by forking left on a grassy path. Follow the path through a small metal gate beside a large one and go straight down this beautiful green meadow, at first not far from trees on your right, then up the centre heading for a stile visible in the fence. After the stile, continue in the same direction, up the highest part of the pasture (shared by cows and sheep, unusually), not far from the left-hand edge. At the other side, your path dips down to a black modern kissing-gate. Your path now drops steadily through woods. You emerge into another large field and a clear path straight across should be visible from above, in the direction of a tall transmitter tower in the distant woods. Take that path to the other side of the field and veer right along the edge uphill.
- 6 At the top of a slope, turn left on a clear path through woods and go down two steps to a tarmac lane. Turn left on this very quiet lane. Soon you have views left of the field you crossed and, in 500m, you are joined from the right by the North Downs Way (NDW) at a signpost. In another 250m or so, as the lane comes out of the trees, you meet another little fingerpost on your right pointing to the NDW. Turn right here on a path up steps, keeping straight on at a chain stile. At the top, another chain stile takes you to a four-way junction. Turn left along a ridge, still on the NDW. You have terrific views right across the Weald of Kent.
- 7 In 100m you reach a large pit and the Wye Millennium Monument in the shape of a giant crown that you can't see from ground level. Go round either side of the monument and continue on a path that runs between more pits and takes you through a black kissing-gate. The NDW now follows the hillside with a wire fence on your left. Finally, after 1 km, you reach a kissing-gate leading out to a tarmac lane, familiar from your outward journey. Turn right and cross the main road.

Postliminary: The Devil's Kneading Trough again 600m=0.4 miles

Same mini-map as start. The return to the car park is similar to the starting route. Go through a wooden swing-gate and veer left on the main path. The path comes out of the trees, veers right and goes through a wooden swing-gate onto the open hillside. Veer left along the contour of the hill giving you more views of the dramatic ravine. At a yellow arrow by the sharp end of the valley, fork left, leaving the NDW, taking you straight back to the car park where the walk began.

Getting there

By car: if coming from the west (e.g. London), the easiest route is on the M20. Come off at exit 9. Follow signs for A28 Canterbury (filter right). This takes you under the M20, sharp left at a roundabout, left at a T-junction and back under the M20. Wye is signed right after about 2½ miles. Go over the level crossing, through the village and, after passing the church and the College, keep straight ahead as for Brook, Hastingleigh. The car park is 2 miles further, on the left, after the Devil's Kneading Trough restaurant.

By train: The wonderful village of Wye, with its railway station, is 1 mile from the walk. It could be included, using the paths shown on the OS map (begin behind the church) to make a very satisfying 11-mile walk.
